Educational Aims

Outline Description of Course

This MA program offers an excellent academic training for all those who wish to pursue a career in international affairs either in their home country’s civil services, or in international organizations, multinational business, global media or in international non-governmental organizations. The program combines academic excellence, based on internationally active research, with pragmatic specialization on specific issues in world politics. It explores international affairs from a theoretical point of view in semester 1, critically introducing key concepts and discussing recent research; and it has a strong vocational component with its compulsory internship and its specialization on specific international issue areas in semester 2.

Students will have core classes on current debates in international relations. They can additionally choose in both semesters from a range of modules in politics, history and law. Small class seminars allow students to develop their analytical skills, their oral and written presentation techniques, their rhetoric abilities as well as their capacity to research, compile and produce thematic reports. Case studies and occasional simulation games will deepen the students’ theoretical and practical knowledge of negotiation, diplomacy and international affairs. At the end of the year, the writing of a dissertation on a topic of their choice will give students the opportunity to prove the breadth and depth of their knowledge. Dissertations will be written in close collaboration with and supervision through experienced members of academic staff.

3 Assessment Criteria

All Supplementary or course Regulations should be read in the context of the relevant University Study Regulations.

Please refer to this information on http://www.nottingham.ac.uk/regulations/.

Progression Information:

This programme will comply with the University Postgraduate taught assessment regulations which can be found at http://www.nottingham.ac.uk/quality-manual/study-regulations/taught-postgraduate-regulations.htm

Degree Information:

Postgraduate Masters, Diploma and Certificates will be awarded with Merit to students who achieve a final credit-weighted mark of at least 60% and with Distinction to students who achieve a final credit-weighted mark of at least 70%.

The marks of each module are weighted according to the number of credits they are worth.

Module marks of up to 20 credits can be between 40%-30% (30%-20% for Postgraduate Diploma) and be compensated if the student has passed modules worth at least 80 credits and has a weighted average of at least 50% (40% for Postgraduate Diploma).

Students who fail to meet the requirements to be awarded the Master award may be eligible for the award of Postgraduate Diploma if they have completed 120 credits, which may include the dissertation, at a credit weighted average of 40% or above.

Students who fail to meet the requirement to be awarded the Postgraduate Diploma may be eligible for the award of the Postgraduate Certificate if they have completed 60 credits at a credit weighted average of 40% or above.

Borderlines

Students will be considered as borderline candidates for a higher class in the exam board meeting in consultation with the external examiners, where they fulfill the following requirements:
• For Distinction: a weighted average of 69% AND marks of 70% or above in at least 80 credits.
• For Merit: a weighted average of 59% AND marks of 60% or above in at least 100 credits.
• For Pass: a weighted average of 49% AND marks of 50% or above in at least 100 credits.

Borderlines for Postgraduate Diplomas and Postgraduate Certificates will be considered at 39% for Pass, 59% for Merit and 69% for Distinction. Students must have at least two thirds of credits in the higher classification to be raised.

Section D. Learning Outcomes

Knowledge and Understanding
• Students will gain knowledge and understanding of: • A1 International relations theories • A2 Diplomacy and the history of state relations • A3 The functioning of international organisations and administrations • A4 Basic concepts of international law and international political economy • A5 Specific issue areas of international politics: development policies, environmental policies or security issues

Intellectual Skills
• Students will be able • B1 To develop their own arguments within the current debates in international relations • B2 To analyse contemporary global politics • B3 To analyse, describe and evaluate international policies • B4 To compare and analyse governmental foreign policies across time and space

Transferable/Key Skills
• Students will have learnt the following transferable skills: • D1 Oral presentations including electronic presentation techniques • D2 Writing of memos and file notes • D3 Research and writing of thematic reports • D4 Team organisation and task force division of labour • D5 Negotiation and diplomatic skills

Teaching and Learning for all sections if summarised

Modules will be taught in form of lectures and seminars. Some modules will include practical training such as simulation or negotiation games. Modules will be assessed by essays and/or unseen written exams. In the specialisation modules of semester two essays can take the form of thematic reports, cabinet files or other written exercises which reflect a professional working environment. For their compulsory internship, students will have to constitute portfolios with information on the organisation they worked for, an experience report and documentation of their application and working process. The portfolio will be assessed in oral discussion with two members of staff. Dissertations will be written in close supervision through academic staff. They will be assessed through two members of staff. A moderation process through an external examiner will apply for dissertations which have received marks above 70%, below 50% and borderline marks.

Teaching and Learning for all sections if summarised

Modules will be taught in form of lectures and seminars. Some modules will include practical training such as simulation or negotiation games.
Modules will be assessed by essays and/or unseen written exams. In the specialisation modules of semester two essays can take the form of thematic reports, cabinet files or other written exercises which reflect a professional working environment. For their compulsory internship, students will have to constitute portfolios with information on the organisation they worked for, an experience report and documentation of their application and working process. The portfolio will be assessed in an oral discussion with two members of staff. Dissertations will be written in close supervision through academic staff. They will be assessed through two members of staff. A moderation process through an external examiner will apply for dissertations which have received marks above 70%, below 50% and borderline marks.
